“I have come to you to tell you that I am leaving,
That I have no more tears for you to see.
I have come to tell you that I am leaving,
And that I shall never come back to thee.”

This excerpt from "I Have Come to You to Tell You That I Am Leaving" captures the raw emotion of a love lost. The speaker's words are simple yet devastating, conveying the pain and finality of their departure.

“The hour of evening is the hour of prayer,
The hour of silence and of soft regret.
The hour when shadows gather everywhere,
And all the weary world is hushed and set.”

In "The Hour of Evening," Akhmatova paints a vivid picture of the transition from day to night. The fading light and the gathering shadows create an atmosphere of contemplation and reflection, inviting the reader to pause and consider the passage of time and the ephemeral nature of human existence.

“And I shall be waiting for you at the window,
With a smile on my lips and a flower in my hand.
I shall be waiting for you, my love, for ever,
Until the stars have faded and the night is gone.”

This excerpt from "I Shall Be Waiting for You" expresses the enduring hope and longing of a lover who waits patiently for their beloved's return. The speaker's unwavering faith in the power of love is both poignant and inspiring.
