The project was founded in 2015 by writer and educator Aaron Howard. Howard was inspired to start the project after attending a reading by poet and essayist Patricia Lockwood. He was struck by the power of Lockwood's voice and the way she used language to explore the complexities of human experience.

Howard wanted to find a way to preserve the voices of other Michigan writers, so he began interviewing authors from all over the state. The interviews are typically conducted in the authors' homes or studios, and they cover a wide range of topics, including their writing process, their influences, and their thoughts on the state of literature in Michigan.

The Field Recordings Made in Michigan Writers Series has featured interviews with some of the state's most celebrated authors, including:

- Patricia Lockwood
- Dave Eggers
- Jeff VanderMeer
- Nickolas Butler
- Molly McCully Brown
- Jim Harrison
- Elmore Leonard
- Thomas Lynch
- John Smolens
- Linda Bierds

The interviews are available online at the project's website. The site also includes a blog where Howard writes about the project and the authors he has interviewed.

The Field Recordings Made in Michigan Writers Series is an important project that is helping to preserve the voices of Michigan's literary landscape. The interviews provide a valuable resource for scholars, students, and anyone who is interested in the creative process.

The Importance of Oral History

Oral history is a valuable tool for preserving the past. It allows us to hear the voices of people who may not have otherwise been recorded in history. Oral histories can also provide insights into the lives and experiences of people from different cultures and backgrounds.

The Field Recordings Made in Michigan Writers Series is an important example of oral history. The interviews provide a unique glimpse into the lives and creative processes of some of Michigan's most celebrated authors. The interviews are also a valuable resource for scholars and students who are interested in Michigan literature and the creative process.

The Creative Process

The Field Recordings Made in Michigan Writers Series provides a unique opportunity to learn about the creative process. The interviews offer insights into how authors develop their ideas, write their stories, and revise their work.

The interviews also reveal the challenges that authors face. They talk about the struggles of writer's block, the fear of failure, and the difficulty of getting published. But they also talk about the joys of writing, the satisfaction of creating something new, and the power of words to change the world.

The Field Recordings Made in Michigan Writers Series is a valuable resource for anyone who is interested in the creative process. The interviews offer insights into the minds of some of Michigan's most celebrated authors and provide a glimpse into the challenges and rewards of writing.

The Field Recordings Made in Michigan Writers Series is an important project that is helping to preserve the voices of Michigan's literary landscape. The interviews provide a valuable resource for scholars, students, and anyone who is interested in the creative process. The series is a testament to the power of words and the importance of preserving the stories of our time.
